

Tzvi Kahn
Senior Policy Analyst

Tzvi Kahn joined the Foreign Policy Initiative as a Senior Policy Analyst in September 2014. He previously served as Assistant Director for Policy and Government Affairs at the American Israel Public Affairs Committee (AIPAC), where he worked on policy communications concerning the Israeli-Palestinian conflict, Iran's nuclear program, foreign aid, and the U.S.-Israel strategic partnership. From 2013 to 2014, he was a National Security Fellow for the Foundation for Defense of Democracies. He has written for National Review, The Weekly Standard, The American Interest, The New York Post, The Forward, FrontPage Magazine, American Thinker, Middle East Quarterly, and the Jewish Telegraphic Agency. Tzvi holds a master's degree in Middle East Studies from The George Washington University's Elliott School of International Affairs, where his thesis focused on the instability in the Sinai Peninsula and its implications for the Israel-Egypt peace treaty. He earned his bachelor's degree in English and in Classical Languages from Yeshiva University.